2. HIGH-LEVEL GAME CONCEPT

INK-BLEED is a 2D psychological horror puzzle game set inside the comic book The Silent House of Hollow Hill. The player awakens without a speech bubble, making them an "unperson" in the comic's world.

Presented as a playable comic, the game is divided into three scenes made up of multiple individual frames. The player uses a flashlight to explore dark rooms, interact with characters, and steal speech bubbles containing words that can later be used to solve puzzles and moves between frames. Comic-style camera movement and panel transitions make the player feel like they are moving through the pages of a comic.

3. HOW THE GAME FITS THE THEMES (COMIC, LIGHT, TWIST)

COMIC:

The game takes place directly inside comic panels. Visuals use simple comic borders, speech bubbles, and black-and-white ink styles.

LIGHT:

Light is both a visual and gameplay mechanic.

Rooms are dark. The player uses a flashlight to navigate and reveal characters, but keeping the light on alerts an enemy (the Ink Crawler).

The player therefore has to decide: Do I use the light to see, or do I stay hidden?

TWIST:

The player initially believes that they are the victim trapped inside a cursed comic. They gradually discover that the characters and monsters are not necessarily what they appear to be. At the climax, the player steals the final speech bubble from the apparent monster. In the final level, the player discovers that the monster is actually the Comic Artist's hand, attempting to erase the anomaly that has entered the comic. The player was never simply a victim.

4. GAME FLOW & LEVEL BREAKDOWN

Intro — Entering the Comic

A teenager is reading The Silent House of Hollow Hill when ink erupts from the book and pulls them inside. The player awakens in the comic without a speech bubble and discovers that they can interact with the speech bubbles of other characters.

Chapter 1 — The Rotted Bedchamber

The player explores a series of dark Victorian comic frames, encounters Arthur the Butler, and discovers how speech bubbles can be used to gain abilities and progress through the comic.

Chapter 2 — The Hallway of Shadows

The comic becomes darker and more dangerous. The player is introduced to a flashlight, which reveals hidden details and helps them navigate the darkness, but can also attract the Ink Crawler. The player must explore the frames carefully while avoiding the creature and interacting with another character to gain a new ability.

Chapter 3 — The Ink Heart

The final frames become increasingly distorted. The player encounters the Ink Shadow and discovers that stealing speech bubbles has been damaging the comic and its characters.

To escape, the player must return what they took. As the comic repairs itself, a path out of the page opens and the player escapes.
